

A website that turns searches into appointments

A new site for Columbia Animal Hospital, built around one job: when someone in Columbia or Foxworth needs a veterinarian — usually on a phone, in a hurry — they find you, they trust you, and they call.

Built and ready to launch

TODAY

Where the current site loses people

- It was not laid out for a phone. Most people looking for a veterinarian are on one, and pinching and dragging sideways to read your hours is friction at the worst possible moment.
- Two directories have your address wrong. The Marion County Development Partnership lists 1498 Hwy 98 East. US Companies lists Old Hwy 98 E. Local search ranking rests on every listing reading the same way.
- Three places say you open at 7:30 on Saturday. You say 8:00. Someone who drives over at 7:30 and finds a locked door does not come back a second time.
- The whole site exists twice. Every page is also reachable at columbiaanimalhospital.vetsourcecms.com, so search engines split the credit between two copies instead of giving it all to your own domain.

ALREADY BUILT

Nineteen pages, finished, waiting on you

Home, About, Services, Our Team, New Patients, Resources, Contact, an appointment request, and a page of its own for each of your nine services.

- Written from your own published words. Every fact — your hours, your address, what each service involves, what the doctors studied and when — traces back to something the practice already publishes. Where a source could not be confirmed, the claim was left off rather than guessed at.
- Built to be found. Structured data on every page carrying your hours and the area you serve, one source of truth for the address so it cannot drift, and a migration plan that redirects every old page so nothing you have built up in search is lost. Plain HTML, so there is no page builder and no monthly platform fee underneath it.

Nothing on this site was invented.

No testimonials, no star ratings, no awards, no claim you have not made yourself.

The record of where every fact came from — including the ones deliberately left off — is handed over with the site.

WHAT IT COSTS

Two ways to do this, the same site either way

RECOMMENDED

LAUNCH AND LOOK AFTER IT

$2,500 to start

then $150 a month

Twelve months, then month to month — cancel after that and the site comes with you. Hosting, backups, security updates, and the changes a practice needs: hours, a new doctor, a service added. The listing corrections are in here too. Year one, $4,300.

BUY IT OUTRIGHT

$5,500 once

the site is yours

Half on signature, half the day it goes live. Yours to keep, on any host, nothing owed after. Looking after it afterwards is $95 a month if you want it, and nothing if you do not.

Included either way: every old address redirected, the domain pointed, the sitemap submitted, the wrong listings corrected. Not included: photography — sixteen slots still need real pictures of your building and your team, and I would rather say so than bill you for stock photographs of someone else's practice.

FROM YOU

Three answers, and it can launch

- Dr. Wallace Carson. Your site has a live bio page for a fourth veterinarian. He is off the new one until you tell me whether he should be.
- How someone reaches the on-call vet. Your site says one is available after hours and never says how. The most valuable missing sentence you have.
- Saturday's opening time. You say 8:00 AM, three directories say 7:30. Confirm it and I will correct them.

Two to three weeks from the day you say go — and most of that is waiting on those three answers and a photograph of the building, not on me.

Open the site on your phone — that is how most people choosing a vet will see it.

A longer version of this sets all of it out; ask and I will send it.
